

Juan Cayetano Losada was the author of a geographical textbook for children which only measured six by four inches. It was first published in 1799 by the widow and son of the famous Spanish printer Joaquin Ibarra y Marin (1725-1785). Although it had only half the pages of the Atlas des enfans, it is clearly based on that work, the text having a question and answer format. This first edition contained six folded plates from the Spanish version published in Madrid by Pantaleon Aznar and titled Atlas elementar: the World, Spain, Europe, Asia, Africa and America (see 1758).

There were seven further editions from 1812 but these had twice as many pages and new plates about 115 x 95 mm. These were similar to those in the first edition but other than the World, now had titles in oval panels instead of the roman numerals in cartouches:

Mapa Mundi; España; Europa; Asia; Africa; America.

swaen.com

Breves tratados de esfera y geografia universal. Madrid, the heirs of Joaquin Ibarra y Marin, 1812; José del Collado, 1814; the heirs of Joaquin Ibarra y Marin, 1822, 1827, 1835; Eusebio Aguado, 1839, 1844.