

With a similar title-page indicating the patronage of King William IV and Queen Adelaide, Thomas Starling's Bible atlas was published as a companion volume to his Cabinet atlas (see 1831a). The twenty four maps and plans, about 95 x 145/150 mm. and with Roman numerals, were beautifully drawn and engraved by Starling in the same style as his earlier ones, again with the imprint 'Printed by Perkins & Bacon' in addition to that of the publisher.

They are usually in contemporary hand colour and as before his name follows the titles, some of which are quite long:

The World...; Mesopotamia ...; Land of Canaan ...; Journeyings ... Israelites ...; Canaan ...; General map of the tribes; Tribes of Asher and Naphtali; Tribe of Zebulon; Tribes of Issachar & Manasseh ...; Tribe of Ephraim; Tribes of Benjamin and Dan; Tribes of Judah & Simeon; The Half tribe of Manasseh ...; Tribes of Gad & Reuben; Land of Moriah or Environs of Jerusalem; Plan of the City of Jerusalem; Plan of the Temple; Kingdoms of Judah and Israel ...; Kingdom of David and Solomon; Canaan shewing the captivities of Judah & Israel; Judea according to Josephus; Judea according to the Apocryphal books; Judea or Palestine ...; Voyages and travels of St. Paul.

The atlas was also issued bound with Starling's A New general index ... the Holy Scriptures, which was published by Edward Bull in 1832.

Years later the maps appeared again in a work by John Kitto entitled Scripture lands. Their imprints were removed and the Roman numerals were replaced with arabic ones (see below).

Biblical cabinet atlas. London, Edward Bull, 1832.

Biblical annual or Scripture cabinet atlas. London, Edward Bull, 1833, 1834; Edward Churton, 1835.
