

The British Library

The first of Lucas J. Waghenaer's two maritime atlases ran to various editions in several languages, including a much enlarged version with German text published in 1603. In addition to the usual charts, this edition contains various miniatures set within the text:

four woodcuts: Tercero; Teneriffe; Fayal; S. Michiel;

Pieter van den Keere's 1598 map of the Azores from the Map-treasury series (see 1598a): Tercera;

twelve very rare charts in the region of 120 x 85 mm. in size, all engraved and signed by Benjamin Wright and with long titles, here abbreviated:

Diepen Cauxi; Micabilis fluvius Grumna; Olijssipo et Salacia; Delineatio Malgae Andaluiae urbs maritima; Cabo de Clara, Irlandiae insula; Promontorium Angliae Cornubia; Scotiae pars maxime borealis; Figura Hitlandiae alias Schetlandiae; Insulae feronicae in medio mari Septentrionali; Situs Regalis opidi Stokholmiae; Afbeeldinghe der Zeecusten; Delineatio nekelenborchij circa Rostwicam.

Just the one of the West Country of England (see below) was reprinted, but with an alphanumeric plate number (a.13) added by Claes J. Visscher in 1649, together with many more rare little maps and charts. These usually feature Wright's signature in various forms and often large compass roses (see 1649a).

The Englishman also engraved at least twelve of the new plates for the later editions of Waghenaer's second and smaller maritime atlas.

The British Library

Den groten dobbelden nieuwen spiegel der zeevaert. Amsterdam, Cornelis Claesz, 1603.

